November 2, 2015I received this as a free item in exchange for my impartial review. When I took this toy out of the box I was surprised at how light it is. The material, made of solid plastic, covered with thick, elastic foam, cast in a mold to look like the Millennium Falcon. It has bright LED lights that give a cool effect when turned on. It has a general feeling that it is sturdy and durable. The remote control is very durable as well, and has some great sound effects. It occupies six batteries and has a built-in quadcopter charging cord. You connect the controller to your computer through a USB cord, and then connect the controller to the quadcopter. It doesn't take long to charge and is well about 30 minutes of flight time when fully charged. I usually fly remote-controlled helicopters, which are very difficult to fly. The Millennium Falcon quadcopter is a little simpler and more stable. It was raining outside when I first tried it, so I had to fly indoors. I wasn't feeling well. Lol. I can't wait to get it outside in the open area to really give it a go. It has one advantage over the other helicopters I fly... I crashed into the walls, furniture and ceiling many times without a hint of damage. I believe it will keep very well. I'm looking forward to many hours of remote control fun with this big little toy. Helpful? November 2, 2015If you're a Star Wars fan or just love remote-controlled models, you love this Millennium Falcon. This is a well-detailed quadcopter that gives the impression of a real model from a short distance. That's not exactly accurate, but it will satisfy almost everyone except hardcore Star Wars fans. It is well balanced in flight. The remote control will make authentic movie sounds at the touch of a button. It also has lights that are in use that are awesome in low light. My teenage boys enjoy this model very much and say the most neat thing about it is how it looks in flight. The body is made of really light Styrofoam, so when it speaks only indoors, it means that! The slightest breeze affects its performance. But aside from this is that it can handle accidents very well without breaking. I have a few concerns about this model. First, how touchy the controls are. If the person who uses this was a previous practice with RC toys, keep in mind that there is a steep learning curve for figuring out how to control this model. However, since it is resistant to an accident, if you are patient, this is not a huge problem. Unfortunately, this is the time it takes to study the channels in the second problem. The battery must be small to be in fit into this model. The result is only about ten minutes of game time to charge and then you have to let the ship cool down for about thirty minutes before charging it again. This can become frustrating when you learn to control the flight. I noticed that if you plug the charger into the model model (which is easy to do since it's square), it will seem faulty. The solution is to simply turn the charger cord around and plug it in again. The last concern I have is that it is easy to suck a piece of stray hair from the floor into the rotors, which causes it to bind and stop the rotor. This, in turn, leads to the fact that the whole toy becomes off-balance. Helpful? October 24, 2015Octo... I don't know where to start... But I have to say that this has to be one of the coolest toys I've ever seen and played with!!! It just blows my mind how toys are now... Not to mention that it's a Star Wars toy:) The Falcon is a little deceiving... It is made of foam... so it's so light weight... Even the remote control is not heavy at all... When I took it, it felt easy and honestly cheap... But don't let that fool you... Once you turn it on, you don't want to put it down... My and my teenage son loved it... they couldn't stop playing with it... I don't know if because I'm a mom it took me a while to get the hang of it lol... I drop it quite a few times... but since it's made of foam nothing has happened to it... The falcon lights up, and when if you turn off the lights, it looks amazing... It also has a sound... and you could clearly hear the sound of the vacuum cleaner.. It can be a bit noisy, we used it indoors but can't wait to use it outdoors... Of course, on a not very windy day... This toy will be the perfect gift for :) the only not-so-good thing is it used 6 AA batteries... Helpful? November 6, 2015 Which child, who grew up in the 1980s, does not want to fly the Millennium Falcon? I know what I've always done, despite what Lucas said, I always thought Han Solo was, or at least should have been, the star of the original Star Wars trilogy. I was a big fan of Khan and, of course, the Falcon. I cried when Lando betrayed Khan and forced him to be imprisoned in Carbonite. I rejoiced when Leia saved him from Jabba. I was STOKED to find he was starring in a new movie and still plays the wonderful, amazing, super talented Harrison Ford (the greatest American actor ever, in my opinion). So of course you can imagine my delight to find Air Hogs came out with the Millennium Falcon remote control. It's a pretty sturdy little flying toy. I was surprised to find that it is only recommended for internal use. But it's basically a four-prop mini drone encased in a sturdy foam lid, which is a very detailed replica of the Falcon. After a few minutes, I easily figured out how to make it soar and fly. With a little practice, I was able to make it fly well. It charges pretty quickly and can even charge the batteries (4 AA is not included) remote control. Or, you can plug one cord in the Falcon from the remote control and then another cord into the remote control and into the wall to charge it. The remote control makes sound effects that include hyperspace jumping, R2D2 and other classic Star Wars sounds. Overall, I really like this drone. I'm very happy with him. Helpful? November 4, 2015 My son had other Air Hogs Hogs remote control aircraft so I know that they make quality toys that take a beating and keep working well. He's been one of his planes for 5 years and he's still the favorite. This item was packed very securely, however, it was very easy to remove from the packaging. So glad that toy manufacturers are wise to the point that parents don't want to destroy the package and threaten the toy and fingers with sharp blades to get on new toys. Just like other AirHogs products, it takes 6 AA batteries (not included) that you install in the control unit with a Phillips screw driver. There is a small pigtail that tucks into the remote control that you get access through a small hatch that connects to the RC vehicle to charge the onboard battery. This one has a new feature I've never seen before in that it's also including a USB charging cable so you can charge from you compute - but it comes with a warning that if you use this you need to wait 10 to 15 minutes for the battery to cool down. The light showed that the car was charged in just an hour - quite standard for this company. Flying requires open space - better outside. It takes a bit of this to learn how management works, but once we've realized it's amazing - it actually hovers and flies. Very reliable too, since I don't think I ever managed a smooth landing, but the device continued to take off despite repeated crashes. If it lands upside down, it won't fly, and actually spins with enough force that it trimmed my grass. I can see that this is a huge wow hit on Christmas morning. Highly recommended!! Helpful? October 31, 2015Air Hogs Star Wars Remote Control Millennium Falcon..... Great Control..... Great look..... Children and adults will love to fly around this..... At first I was a little concerned about the size and material it is made of..... My problems are not currently there..... Believe me, it holds very well..... I've had some serious tough crashes and he didn't phase it at all..... He still flies fine and no damage at all..... Very easy to use once you get used to it..... But, first of all, he has power and he's gone from me... Lol..... so I had to go hunt him down..... But once I got used to the controls, I was just fine with it..... I highly recommend this to anyone who is looking for such an item..... The flight is sleek and the controls are easy to use..... Very cool product..... I love flying it myself, that is when I can get it from my son..... Lol..... Charges via USB..... Remote built into sound influences..... The falcon itself built in the lights Makes it look so real..... Heck, what else can I say we totally love it..... Very pleased Choice..... I got the Star Wars Star Wars Falcon Air Hogs to try for free as part of the review campaign.... Opinions are 100% my own..... I promise you will not be mistaken in buying this..... You get hours and hours of fun from flying this Falcon around..... It's AWESOME !!!! Helpful? November 5, 2015It's A great toy for those who can play video games with a portable controller, or who have remote control experience. It was easy to install the batteries and then connect the Falcon to install the controller. The controller of the house has a small charging connector and is easy to tuck into the compartment when charged. It will only take some time to charge and then it is ready to fly. Because I'm not so familiar with the game using the controller, I had a little hard to earn it fly in the direction I wanted. The Falcon itself is very light, made of some foaming material, but very durable. The controller is hard plastic, durable, with easy-to-go controls. The lights are very cool looking and the sound effects are amazing. You can hear Chewbacca, R2D2, laser cannon, and warp speed sounds, making it more realistic when flying. I would recommend this for any Star Wars fan who has experience with portable remotes. Helpful? November 12, 2015In my mind when I was thinking about getting this I thought it would be this huge spaceship flying through the air, well, that's not even possible for a toy that doesn't cost much money. So once I lowered my expectations this toy is actually really cool. First of all, it's a size, I expected it to be a lot bigger, but as seen in the photos below, it's a little bigger than an adult hand. It's made of Styrofoam, which if it's going to play in the house at all is actually a good thing, but it makes for a very fragile toy, so if you have a kid who is toys it can't be a toy for them. As for flying I wouldn't say it flies more like hovering, but still it's really fun to play. Make sure you buy a lot of extra AA batteries it takes six of them and the batteries are not included. It also burns through the batteries very quickly. All in all, it is a really funny toy to go out with the kids and play in the yard or in the park. Must be for any real Star Wars fan!!! Helpful? November 2, 2015Y was glad I got the Air Hogs Star Wars remote control Millennium Falcon for consideration ... with the help of my 11-year-old grandson who has several Air Hogs and other drones. The Millennium Falcon is well packed..... But the Falcon, controller and cable were easier to remove from the box than in the case of most toys. It was a plus..... I was surprised that the Falcon is smaller than I expected.... Like the controller..... but my grandson doesn't feel that negative.... He said most air pigs are not very big ... The material that the Falcon made of looked to be on the cheap side... but it's very durable.... It's not a fly right out of the toy box.... It needs to be charged....that took about an hour..... and the Falcon and the dispatcher should be put in sync ... , It took a few tries..... Oh, and there are a moan of 6 batteries that need to be installed..... It was raining by the time the falcon was completely So we decided to fly indoors.... not a good idea.... even though the room is large with 2nd high ceilings, and my grandson and his father (yes, he had to play as well) have the experience of flying drones.... it crashed into walls and pretty much everything else within 15 minutes of flight time we got off the charge. It is also quite noisy indoors and has a shrill sound that annoyed me. Since it was supposed to be recharged, we decided to wait until the next day to fly it outside..... It was fresh the next day and because it is so light weight the Falcon didn't do well in the wind, so the bulk of the flight was done that evening when there was no wind.... One thing we learned is not to try to get him to take off on the grass..... who clogs the rotors... In addition, the controls need a smooth, easy touch and..... The lights on it look great in the dark.... It was flying OK ... Only a few crashes ... and it held up well..... We really had fun flying on it until, again, it had to be recharged in about 15 minutes.... my grandson said that the Millennium Falcon is kind of cool.... He's not a Star Wars fan, so his opinion is based solely on him just being a remote control fly toy..... Hence, I personally will not consider paying the high price he commands because it is Star Wars... That's it. It's detailed, durable, and fun.... but the fact that it has more downtime... Needing to be charged ... than flight time..... It requires 6 batteries to be replaced on a regular basis.... And the price... are negatives for me.... I think the Star Wars Pigs Remote Control Millennium Falcon is probably best suited for avid Star Wars fans... they will get the most pleasure from it..... Helpful? November 12, 2015Y had such high hopes for this product as a Star Wars fan that I was thrilled to receive it. Air Hogs Had such a brilliant concept the look of this product was spot on the paint and the little details are perfect. Classic sounds are true to movies that most toys aren't. This is not a children's toy definitely a toy for adults/husbands. It is very difficult to maneuver sticks both have two functions that seem to contradict themselves. When flying near a wall or object the fan blades tend to suck sideways against the wall rather than continue to fly straight. Being super lightweight allows this toy to fly long distances, but also makes for constant flipping and unable to fly at all. Battery life is absolutely scary my laptop took one hour to fully charge, but my PS4 took a little longer. Then with a normal game without hyperspeed it will give you ten minutes of good play, then it will weaken and only rotate in a circle on the floor for another 5-7 minutes. much less. This does not include the 6 AA batteries required for the controller, which are not included in the $90 price tag. The Millennium Falcon is made of super-long foam, which we tested to the maximum from high droplets, which it just bounces off. Plastic fan blades don't cheaply made it will be grass and leaves. The strength of the fans is also a bit dangerous, making it not child friendly because they are trying to catch it and can get their fingers into the blades. We had an accident when my 3 year old husband flew it about 7-10 inches over his head and her hair was sucked into the blade making a terrible matte up hair mess. This will be an item display on our Star Wars shelf looks definitely not to play. I can't recommend this for a price it's just not worth it. Helpful? This is.
